Wassistoro Theatris. Miss Amelie Isos sppeared last evening to a brilliant and delighted audience in her character of Parthonia, in the exquisite play of "Ingomer." Her conception of the part was original and her acting superb. Her reading was caroful and admirably emphasized, and was frequently interrupted by the hearty applause of her auditors. She was admirably sustained by the excellent company, and we may particularize Messra, Meldrum, Pannio, Phillips, Bokee and Ward, and Mrs. Muzzy. In fact, the entire company, which is one of the best that has ever appeared in this city, never played better.

This evening files ince will receive a benefit, and will impersonate the part of Mary Susprin the delightful historical play of "Mary, Queen of Scots." We hope the benefit may prove an ovation, as the benefitiarie is in every manner worthy the kindest consideration of this public. The play is one abounding in interest, and is new to many of our citizens; and the constituency of the public citizens and the citizens and the constituency of the public citizens and the constituency of the public citizens and the Ammermente of the deviler.

To night Forrest appears as Spartacus, in the play of "The Gladiator."

play of "The Gladiator."

One Fallows' Hall.—Kunkel's Opera Troupe of Nightingsies still continue to charm the audiences that flock to their delightful sources. The entertainments provided are characterized by their rollecting fun, artistic music, and delightful Terpsichorean feats, and are tempered throughout with the utmost pudicity. This evening another new entertainment will be offered, in which will be incorporated new songs, new dances, new acts, new burlesques, de. Every man, woman and child should visit the Kuckels' delightful performances before the admirable company leaves the city.

Assamly's Causes.—The friends of this the admirable company issues the city.

Assamily's Chunch.—The friends of this church are invited, this and to-morrow evening, to a novel and beautiful exhibition of sun pictures to be given in the church. Each tiny photograph is magnified 5,000 times, and as the eye rests upon it, the ear will be informed as to its name and other particulars. Interesting objects will be presented in America, Europe, and the Holy Land, and copies of paintings of the old masters.

Castransary.—To-night is the benefit and last appearance but one of Miss Julia Mortimer. Cas we say more? Of course, the bill will be great and the house jammed; but we remember that the ventilation of the Canterbury is very perfect. So go in and get aqueszed.

Hurryang Them Off.

On Wednesday, previous to the signing of the emancipation bill by the President, several undred slaves were sent by their masters to Baltimore and the lower counties of Maryland. Every train from this city to Baltimore on that day contained slaves, whose desileation was the "nego pens" of that city. Campbell & Boo's "pen," in West Pratt street, is crowded with slaves, whose owners realed in the District of Columbis; other "pens" in that city are likewise full of the poor victims. We doubt very much whether one fourth part of the money appropriated by Congress ($1,000,000) for compensating the loyal owners of slaves emancipated by the act will be required, as scarcely one thousand slaves now remain in the District—and the majority of those who do remain are old and deoropid, and who in a slave market would be desumed "worthless stock." How many of the poor oreatures have been run out of the city since the bill became law, we are unable to state; but that slaves have disappeared from here within the last twenty-lour hours, and since the bill went into effect, is a notorious fact. We are informed that early yesterday morning several wagon loads of "chatteis" left Washington for Prince George's and St. Mary's counties, Maryland.

flargaining for a Platot.

Two men were arrested by officers Gibson, of the Metropolitan Police, and McGee, of the ortporation, yesterday afternoon about one o'clock, in the notorious Fighting alley on the Island. A soldier by the name of G. W. Webb officed to sell a pistoi to W. Richards, while both parties were in one of the notorious dans of that famous locality. The soldier offered it for $15, but finally, on the proposition of Richards, consented to go out into the street and close the hargain by a fight. But before the question of property was decided, the police interfered and took both parties before Justice Siratton, of the 10th precinct, who, after hearing the case, fined the parties $2.94 each. The question of title after a sale of property has often led to a fight, but it was reserved for our brave combatants in this instance to inaugurate this original method of selling property on the issue of a fight.

Ward Political Club Meetings.

The Capitel Extension.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says:

"Owing to the changes made in the plans of Mr. Walter, the accomplished architect of the Capitol extensions, by the military superintendent, the original estimate of $2,075,000 will probably be increased to $6,281,000, and perhaps more. A large portion of this extra expense is for the tawdry frescoes and gay glidings with which the building has been bedunded.

"Other art decorations have also been planned by the italians, who paint by the day, having their bushes and colors found, and one of them as n immense national picture, to encircle the rotunds, in which Miss Harriet Lane is to figure as "America."

Concert to sick Feldiers.

The invalids of Indiana Hospital (at the Palent Office) were again treated to an impromptin concert from the band of Mr. Hase, of this city, assisted by five vocalists, at four o'clock yesterday afterneon. The music was preceded by an appropriate prayer by Rev. Mr. Ryan, of this city. Instrumental relocies of great sweetness, gems from operas, and oppular airs, initiated the exercises; these were followed by three or four quartettes, with melodean accompaniment. Then came three soles, executed in masterly style; after which an admirable quintette was performed, and then the Elisworth army song adapted to the air of the 'John Brown song." All the music was selected for the occasion, and gave infinite was selected for the occasion, and gave infinite pleasure, mingled with a touch of sadness, to the suffering invalids, who gave expression to their gratitude in a vote of thanks.

A Star Visible In the Day-time. Concert to Blek Foldlers.

A Star Visible in the Day-time.

The planet Venus is said to be still visible in the day-time to sharp-sighted people who have the palience to discover her. At noon, on a clear day, she may be found, after a long hunt, a little west of south, and about 46 deg. above the horizon.

Let us rajoing that "neither slavery nor in columnary services, except for offine where the party shall be duy convicted, shall here for exist in this District," when we reacher exist in this District," when we reached the column the column that the column the column that the column the column that th high was handed to us a day or two since— To feel a deeper sepse of grattinde to God for se hope that the "end is pear" for such and the hope that the "end is near" for such ancituded abominations produced by the "institution." It will be seen that it is from a color ad woman, then a slave. It is written in a tolerably fair female hand, but bears evidence, it crammatical construction, and the use of language, of being written by a slave. We give the aubstance:

Rusge, of being written by a slave. We give the substance:

Sin: I am a poor distressed woman with three little children around me. I have left my owner, not because of anything which I have done, but after beating me severely they put, me it jail and kept me there three weeks, because I would not consent to go into the country. They then took me out because I was about to be confined. This was two months ago. They are now after me to go into the country. Just before I left them they beat me again for refusing to go. They then brought a hack up to the door, with the intention of taking me and my children away by force, and God knows where they were going to earry me: I could not tell. My owners are accossionists. I succeeded in making my escape with my children before they got hold of us. My master vows he will have his will and pleasure with me if I am above ground, and I have no doubt he will get me yet, for he, with other men to assist him, are scouring the Island every night in search of me, and others in my condition. They took one woman and her child away last night. She creamed "Murder." but no person came to her relief. For God's aske, can nothing be done to save me?

Mr. Forrest. We had the pleasure of seeing Forrest in the play of "Damon and Pythias," on Wednesday evening, at Ford's Atheneum. While this piece abounds in lofty sentiments, and is calculated to inspire us with a strong regard for disinterested friendship, we must confess that we prefer Mr. Forrest in his "Richeileu" or King Lear." Although he is always grand as Damon, he more than equaled public expectation. In the Senate scene, he was in very truth the indignant, outraged Roman Senator, full of passion and of fire, and repeatedly, by his spiendid rendition, brought down the house.

his aplendid rendition, brought down the house.

His parting from Pythias was characterized by all the grattude of a generous, soble nature. Deeply touching, and perhaps the finest facture in the piace, was his interview with Hermion, his wile. The calm but genile manner in which he informs her of his condemnation to death, and of the devoted friendship of Pythias, makes a scene in which the firmness of the old Roman is shown in beautiful contrist with his conjugal and parental affection. His joy at having kept his pledge, returning in time to save his faithful friend, amounted almost to delirium. By a display of that wonderful power of passion painting, peculiar to himself alone, the great actor kept up a thrilling interest in the place to lits very close.

The chief charm in Mr. Forrest's acting is the great intendity of feeling that characterizes him in every roke. Upon the stage, we recognize him not as Forrest, the gontleman and the citizen, but as the real, living character he personates.

Mr. McCullough's Pythias was a fine piece of citizen, but as the real, living character he personates Mr. McCuliough's Pythias was a fine piece of acting. He must soon become a general favorite, so clear and accurate is his perception of the role he assumes. Miss Athena was earnest and natural in the character of Hermion. Mr. Forrest will this evening appear in Dr. Bird's celebrated tragedy of "The Gladiator," supported by Mr. McCullough, Miss Athena, and the excellent atock company. All should improve the present opportunity to see the great tragedian, and encourage the enterprising manager, who has at a large expense provided us with an elegant theatre in Washington.

Soldiers' Letters.

As no special reason exists at the presenting why soldiers of the army of the Potoma may not correspond with relatives and friend the authorities are taking stops to further the object as much as possible under the circum the authorities are taking more the circum collect as much as possible under the circum stances. Packages or bags are made up by the posimaster here for each division, and sent it Fortress Monroe. Thence they can be obtained and distributed under such directions as ger orals of divisions may prescribe. So, also return packages may be made up for the For rers, and sent hither for distribution.

Work on the rear of the Treasury building is now progressing quite satisfactorily. It is to be in the monolithic style, or the same as that of the south wing. The architect has devised a plan by which the present dull, dark, and heavy iront on Fourteenth street may be made oon sistent in its architecture with the south wing and that now in progress of construction.

A large sale of real estate was advertised to take place on Wednesday, in the city, but noting came of it. There are, however, occasions sales in a small way, and some lots in the suburbs are being made useful for gardening pur poses. The fact is, the scale of laid out lots for this city is enough for a population like that o London or Paris. Notwithstanding the vas calls for buildings or lots for business purpose for six months, there seems to have been nearly enough secommodaluous beforeshand.

"How awful hot!" exclaimed almost every body yesterday; and for the last two days the weather has been almost suffocating in it effects. The long, dreary season of rain ha passed away, and summer has come in re-sarmest. Bo we go. Not long ago, the weathe effects. The long, ureary seamer has come in re-earnest. So we go. Not long ago, the weathe was "too cold," and soon after it was "too wet," and now it is "too hot." If the clerk of the weather were to attempt to suit all tastes we should indeed have a singular medley which would suit nobody.
